MARCH SALE

Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

East Hampton Man Parks In The Lobby Of The Museum Of Modern Art

By Dan Rattiner

Bran Ferren, East Hampton High School class of '73, found a place to park in Manhattan on February 8. He drove up the curb into the lobby of the Museum of Modern Art on East 53rd Street, put his SUV where they told him to, turned off the engine, put the keys in his pocket and walked away. His car is still there. It will be there until April 22. And he will not get a ticket.

This is a worthy achievement, certainly one to be noted in the pages of Dan's Papers. No one has ever done this before. And yes, both the mayor and the chief of police know about what he has done. It's all right with them.

When Bran Ferren was in high school all those years ago, there was not even a hint that someday he would park his car in the lobby of the Museum of Modern Art in Manhattan. Bran loved setting off firecrackers in those days. He enjoyed watching a big chunk of dry ice fill a room with smoke. He liked doing things with colored lights and big explosions. It was, to some people, something called special effects. It was, to others, a danger to society.

After doing some of the effects in a high school play or two, working out of his parents' home on Springs Fireplace Road, Bran at his parents' suggestion moved into a barn on the property to work with his banging and sirens and lights, and then to a small garage on Oak View Highway. He hired people to help him with what he was doing, and, as it soon became apparent that what he was doing was costing him more money than he could make repairing electronics, radio and TVs, which is what he was doing at the time, he declared himself in business. He would be President of ASSOCIATES AND FERREN, special effects experts to the stars. Bran's parents, both of whom were accomplished artists working out of their studio on Springs Fireplace Road, breathed a sigh of relief.

Bran's idea... was to obtain a vehicle that could explore the most remote parts of the planet in style and comfort.

I suppose that his mother Rae Ferren is amazed as everyone else about the meteoric rise of the work of Bran Ferren over the years. Probably not in her wildest dreams, however, did she ever imagine that Bran would beat her or her late husband, to the Museum of Modern Art. Bran probably couldn't have imagined that either.

Bran Ferren's career has been like the meteor that Bran might have designed himself if God hadn't designed it first. Bran Ferren got work doing special effects in Hollywood movies and Broadway shows, one of which was the musical comedy Little Shop of Horrors. Yes, Bran made the giant talking and man eating plant that, in the film, has Rick Moranis and Ellen Greene in its power. Bran worked on rides at amusement parks. He used this incredible genius to design the special effects for Ken Russell's movie Altered States, also for the Broadway show Frankenstein.

By the time he was thirty years old he had moved ASSOCIATES AND FERREN out of the garage on Oak View Highway and into a vast one story industrial building deep in the woods of the East Hampton Industrial Park on Wainscott-Harbor Road. I have interviewed him there from time to time. You sit in his office next to this green, ten foot tall plant with teeth. That is where you go after security has let you in and issued you a nametag. ASSOCIATES AND FERREN, for reasons that are obvious when you think hard about it, is a high security operation. Or at least it was until 1989 when Bran sold his operation to Walt Disney Imagineering for a rumored ten million dollars. Along with it went Bran Ferren, continuing to run the operation as a subsidiary of Walt Disney, for the next ten years. After the sale the operation

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

SouthoftheHighway magazine (premier issue May 25) will be slightly more colorful, slightly more hot, slightly more over the edge, slightly more haute couture... ahh, beautiful Betsey Johnson will be writing a very unique fashion column.

Surprise, surprise! Sean Puffy Combs is not guilty and the man he has to thank for it is – God. Gee, who knew God was on the jury?

Kate Capshaw constantly surprises us with just how fabulous you can look...even if you have a bevy of children and a hectic life style. She was spotted at the premier of ShowTimes' A Girl Thing wearing a beautiful black lace Dolce & Gabbana outfit. You did remind us what a "girl" you are.

Yes, even we make mistakes...Jerry and Adrianne Cohen were surprised to learn they have another daughter and her name is Jennifer. Even more surprised was their own daughter Carolyn who looked at our photo pages and saw she had a sister! The Cohen household is filled with visiting children and grandchildren but no, Jennifer doesn't live there.

Did you know that David and Julia Koch will have a new highchair joining them at their table this summer at their home out here? They have a new baby named Mary Julia and she was born February 2, at New York Hospital. We feel a silver spoon is not enough for her...how about a platinum spoon? Congrats!

This goes in the "it's nice to know they are human" category. Julia Roberts was overheard lamenting about her figure to Calvin Klein. She needed to be assured that his gowns would not make her butt look too fat. We would like to add, don't worry, Julia, we think that's not a problem, or at least it's a problem we would like to have.

We have to echo what our fellow Hamptonite Neal Travis wrote in his column. He wrote if those ambitious yuppies who've been making life miserable in the Hamptons for the past few summers have any money left (after the death of dotcoms) they should limo over to the Sherry Netherland and fork over money for the benefit to raise money for The Retreat. Alec and Billy Baldwin, Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley back this organization and our own Hamptons Classic was one of the sponsors.

Speaking of Billy Joel, word is out that he will turn up at Radio City Music Hall on March 29, for a tribute to Brian Wilson which will be an all-star gathering. Paul Simon will also be appearing. Makes us think why don't these two Hamptonites do a concert together at "Back to

Here's what our latest patients are saying....

• When I first went to see you about having my eyes done, I told you my greatest desire was to be able to enjoy theatre again by seeing the faces of people on stage. This week I have been to two events, less than two weeks after my surgery, and that wish has been granted......

Robert Barandes
Attorney at Law

• I must admit that I was somewhat apprehensive about the final outcome of the surgery, I am very glad I had it done. Now I realize with great happiness that this was the right choice for me. The old fear of losing my eyesight or having complications because of it, seem very laughable now.
As a patient and psychologist I want you to know that your professionalism, reassurance and caring before, during and after the surgery are greatly appreciated. Besides being a physician you are a true gentleman. You can be sure that I will recommend you enthusiastically to anyone who talks to me about LASIK surgery.

Dr. Marie A. Carrese
Counseling Psychology

• You couldn't get the smile off my face, waking up and able to see without the aid of glasses or contacts. I was very pleased with Dr. Ricci and his staff for making one feel at ease and being so confident going through the procedure became even higher security. Outside on the street was a sign that read WDI. Except for the mouse ears that stuck out the top, you would have no idea that within this structure, Bran Ferren and his crew were scheming and planning all sorts of things for the great Mickey Mouse. And to get in, you'd need permission from headquarters in Orlando, Florida.. They weren't giving that out easily.

Among the things that Bran Ferren and his crew designed for WDI were the fourteen story Tower of Terror ride in Walt Disney World. Also the General Motors Race Track designed for Epcot. And various other fireworks, explosions and lighting displays. Once a kid, always a kid seemed to be Bran's motto.

Bran Ferren left WDI one year ago, and at the time, his job title was President for Research and Development Technology. Whatever Bran wanted to make go boom, Bran got. And one of those things was the biggest and most powerful SUV in the world, an experimental modification made on a commercial truck manufactured by one of the subsidiaries of Daimler-Mercedes.

Bran's idea, which I guess he wrote down on his requisition slip when requesting it from the powers that be at Disney, was to obtain a vehicle that could explore the most remote parts of this planet in style and comfort. He was curious about the planet, and he wanted to go out and search for dinosaur bones, or perhaps the ruins of an underwater city, but he didn't want to do it slapping mosquitoes during the night in canvas tents, and eating cold spam cut out from a can. His constant companion, Robyn Low, is a gourmet cook. The Ferren household in Beverly Hills is a state of the art edifice filled with creature comforts. The Ferren household in East Hampton is the same. When you want to go out into the rough, why rough it?

And so, after receiving his experimental giant SUV from Daimler-Mercedes (now DaimlerChrysler) in 1997, and after being given the go ahead to get out there and explore the world and find interesting things that would make the rest of the world wonder and shake its collective head, Ferren brought in teams of designers to make additions and subtractions to his monster SUV to make it worthy of his appointed task at hand.

What Bran subsequently rolled into the Museum of Mondern Art in February is the result of those efforts. The vehicle has on its roof an electric remote controlled reconnaisance airplane so if you get out into the middle of the Amazon, you can send it out and have it send back video images of the road ahead, or the road behind or wherever, so you can get an idea where you ought to be driving next. Its twelve foot height can, at the press of a button, rise up to more than twenty feet thereby opening an upstairs sleeping loft that has color TV, a satelite dish, and a stargazing dome. There is a huge kitchen area below where, as Robyn put it, she can cook a full course Thanksgiving turkey dinner in the middle of the Sahara Desert. There is state-of the art bathroom with a built in incinerator for burning waste, and for communication, besides the obvious toys and computers, an extendable 50 foot mast which goes up at the press of a button allowing them to contact anybody anywhere in the world.

As for Bran's stated goal of using this SUV for traveling around the world, a reporter for The New York Times asked Bran at the opening day at the Modern how he expected to take it across the obvious problems, such as the big oceans.

"By boat," Bran said. "This is not a contest. Its about — wouldn't it be interesting to drive across the Sahara and come upon Lawrence of Arabia's lost train? Or isn't it interesting to go where nobody has looked for dinosuar bones before and find some? So much of this planet has never been explored."

The MaxiMog, as Bran calls it, with its trailor, weighs 28,000 pounds. Its transmission can independently power any one of, or all of, or any combination of its eight wheels, on which are 4 foot diameter $10,000 tires. The engine is powerful enough to haul this entire thing effortlessly up a 40 degree grade. MaxiMog can climb over three foot boulders, and it can climb over – if it had to – other SUVs. There's a cappuccino maker, two refrigerators, a restaurant style stove and cabinetry in the kitchen, heated cup holders, cooled cup holders. A motorbike for short forays this way and that.

So much fuss was made about Bran Ferren's SUV at the Museum of Modern Art at its opening – it is the mother of all SUVs by yards and yards, that officials at DaimlerChrysler took the occasion

Clamming For Dollars

Opponents Run Out Of Options To Stop Mechanical Clam Harvesting In East Hampton

By Dan Rattiner

Sometimes, its not just the law of the land that holds sway. There can also be an unwritten law of a community. In East Hampton, for example, if a store on Main Street sells things that a consensus of the community feels is unsuitable —posters of naked women for example — then one of the members of the Ladies Village Improvement Society pays a visit. Often that is enough to win the day.

Another example of this involves a company called Aquaculture Technologies Corp., which was harvesting clams just offshore Barcelona Point in East Hampton using methods that were, to say the least, horrendous. In a land where clamming is done by individual men with rakes and buckets, this company was using huge underwater machines to stir up the bay bottom, sorting for clams with something resembling a potato grader, and when its hold was full after sorting along one particular strip, haul anchor and head up toward Connecticut.

Turned out it was all perfectly legal. Joe Pillus, the President of Aquaculture Technologies, had bought the underwater property from a company that had gone bankrupt, had been paying county taxes and had gotten a permit from the State DEC to do the clam harvesting. There may be laws toward shore involving clam seeding and harvesting, but out in the open sea there are not many laws that pertain to this activity. In spite of all of this, various environmental groups got together and attacked what was going on from every angle they could. The State DEC was pursuaded to void their permit and instead file suit against Aquaculture, claiming Aquaculture did not legally own the land. Penalties included $434,000 which the DEC estimated to be the value of the clams harvested until they filed suit. There were more than $1 million in penalties. There were also demands that Aquaculture restore the Bay bottom.

As an interim measure, Aquaculture filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection. They also defended themselves in court. Last month a judge overturned the fine, saying that Aquaculture did legally own the underwater land.

Brian Egan, the attorney for Aquaculture, expressed the hope that now the permit would be reinstated. Joseph Pillus, the owner of the company, told Newsday that he hoped to move forward and "fulfill our duty to the Suffolk County taxpayers and revive an industry that is part of Long Island's heritage." •

HOW MOM.COM WILL STOP THE BEAR MARKET

By Dan Rattiner

The other day, one of the New York dailies headlined WHO IS GOING TO STOP THE STOCK FREEFALL?

I know who it isn't going to be. It isn't going to be Alan Greenspan. From what I can see, Greenspan wouldn't know a stampede if it ran over him. He still talks about the strength in the economy, in the housing sector, in the employment sector and in the spending sector as if these aren't going to vanish in the next few weeks, which, if he keeps talking about them like that, they certainly are.

It's also not going to be George Bush Jr. who from what I can see is still struggling to decide what to do with the projected budget surpluses during the next five years as if they are still going to be there.

Why these people do not see what is going on seems amazing until you think about how they are being treated by the rest of us. Both Greenspan and Bush have big houses, servants and huge incomes. They wear suits. With one of them they play Hail to the Chief when he walks into a room. With the other everyone shuts up when he walks into the room.

Wall Street analysts announced last week that the Bull Market is officially over and the Bear Market is now in place. We are going down. And we are going down like sheep, each looking over our shoulders to see whether any of the other sheep are going any other place but this place and they aren't. It's a sheep market.

Furthermore, nobody believes anybody. Commentators get quotes from analysts and the analysts say well maybe this is a good time to be picking up some bargains but then again maybe it has to go down more and then they look around to see how that sounded.

I propose mom.com. In fact I don't propose it. I am telling you. A web site with the name mom.com

Type mom.com, press enter, and there you are. We've all got mothers. But we've all got different mothers. And each and every one of us has got a mother who has, by trial and error, figured out what it is we respond to. They press our buttons. We respond. Press a button on mom.com. I give you a choice.

Mother #1 says "Oh, for heaven's sake. Really."

Mother #2 says "Young man. We expect more from you."

Mother #3 says "This is what you are going to do and that is that."

Mother #4 says "Either you do this or you are gonna get the whupping of your life. And I mean it."

What you are going to do is spend your money rather than hoard it, buy stock instead of hold on to it or sell it, do something today rather than put it off until tomorrow to see first how it goes and invest in the next brilliant idea rather than take a pass.

In other words, the person who is going to stop this stock market stampede is YOU. And YOU. And YOU. And ME.

We can do this. We're Americans. We can stop this free fall because this country is no different this spring than it was last fall and it is all a confidence game. But you knew that. And I'm not your mother.

RETIRED CRIMMINALS.
SO I SAID "STICK 'EM UP," AND ALL I HAD WAS MY HAND IN MY POCKET.
GO ON....

Crime Is Off

Something Has To Be Done To Rectify This Terrible Situation

By Dan Rattiner

Major crime in the City of New York hit an all time low last week. There were just 2,731 major crimes reported during the seven day period. As recently as 1993, there were an average of 7,500 crimes reported every week, but the number has been spiraling downward for years. This is an astonishing drop in a city of eight million people.

And it's a problem. Gone are the thugs lurking around on every corner. Gone are the wild and exciting shootouts that used to take place in midtown every few days. I remember a day one time when I went out of my apartment building, past the doorman with his two sidearms, and saw an armed robbery on the corner, a spiderman on the wall fourteen floors up on the building next door with a bag of jewelery in his mouth, and two teenagers trying to hotwire an empty police car double parked in front of the building while the police officers were off running after a murderer.

New York was an exciting place in those days. And the rest of the world knew it. If you were from somewhere else and you had to go to New York you wore a money belt, kept your head up and your eyes open. New York was big time. And it was quite a rush. No more.

> New York was an exciting place in those days. And the rest of the world knew it... New York was big time. No more.

Today, New York is just another city with a whole lot of silly people saying in sing song voices have a nice day. New York doesn't even have the biggest buildings in the world anymore. The biggest building in the world is in Kuala Lampur for god's sake. Wherever that is.

Something has got to be done.

One thing, I think, is for the city to create a program for criminal education. Two weeks ago, for example, there was this story about a woman in Brooklyn who lived on the eighth floor who had a boyfriend who threatened to kill her in her sleep. She went to the police who told her the usual, which is that in America you can't arrest a man until he commits an actual crime. Killing her would be a crime, for example. Though they could and did give her a piece of paper called an order of protection.

Anyway, one morning she wakes up and there are a lot of police cars and flashing lights out on the sidewalk below. She goes downstairs to see what all the ruckus is about. It's her boyfriend lying there dead. He has a knife in his belt and, as they pieced it together later, was climbing down from the roof to get to her bedroom window when he slipped. This is not effective criminal behavior.

Another thing we ought to do is to alert the rank and file in the police department of just where the present trend is going. The police chief is acting very proud of the work his department is doing in reducing crime. The Mayor is singing his praises. He's looking pretty good. But if the weekly crime rate has sunk from 7,500 to 2,731 in just eight years, think what is going to happen in another four. Without crime, why would you need police officers? And if you don't need police officers, you don't need a police chief. Hey, wake up everybody! • to announce The IMog, a commercial version of the Maximog, stripped down a bit but monstrously expensive at $85,000 nevertheless, soon to be available here in America for suburban housewives to take their kids to school in. The announcement made the front page of The New York Times that day. Eat your heart out Lincoln Navigator owners. Here comes Big Momma.

Where does Bran Ferren go from here with his incredible talent? I haven't a clue. But here are some of Bran's thoughts, as he answered questions posed by The New York Times reporter at the opening of the showing of his Maximog.

THE TIMES: It seems you've designed the ultimate escape vehicle. BRAN: I like civilization and I like the ability to have access to the best of it. I can be on some 500 mile off-road drive and discover something interesting at the bottom of a river and, that eveining while I'm having a pleasant dinner I can be surfing the Web, finding an expert, getting in touch with that expert live and talking to him or her about what I'm seeing — that to me is a good time.

THE TIMES: Where will you travel?

BRAN: I won't consider that this is really expedition ready until its had a whole series of break-in and trial runs to see what I designed wrong. So I wouldn't be surprised if 30 percent of the technical systems ended up underperforming and being modified or changed. There'll be a whole series of test runs in Nevada at the National Automotive Test Center just to be sure that the thing is up to snuff before heading out somewhere serious. I suspect I'll be spending the next year and a half or so in the U. S.

THE TIMES: Your parents are both artists and now you have a project in the Museum of Modern Art. Do you find a pleasing symmetry to that?

BRAN: Yes because for me there has been much too much emphasis on the idea that art and science, or design and technology are mutually exclusive. If nothing else, this can serve as a model of how the two can merge, that you can do both.

THE TIMES: The car looks really tough. Does it make any concessions to style?

BRAN: I think that the great designs are the ones that use a lot of elements together in some way so that something magical happens. ●

YOUR WIFE IS RIGHT. YOU HAVE NO BRAIN.
SO WHAT IS IT DOCTOR?

No Brainers

One Who Forgot He Wasn't President, Another Who Forgot What He Promised

By Dan Rattiner

Here are two no-brainers.

Why is it that President Clinton has gone down in flames? Here was a man who, as President, accomplished so much and handled things with such intelligence and finesse that many historians have declared him the greatest President of the Twentieth Century. Above the waist.

So here is the beginning of his ex-Presidency and all he has been able to do is fall flat on his face. He sneaks out of the White House carrying the furniture, is caught, and has to give much of it back. He tries to lease an office in midtown Manhattan that will be paid for by us taxpayers and it is so costly the deal has to be cancelled. He pardons criminals who have bribed his family members and he's pardoned Marc Rich who is a fugitive from justice and has never even been brought to trial and it's thought what he got for that was about a million dollars. What has gone wrong? He'll be lucky if he doesn't go to jail.

> There is even a woman who next week will grace the cover of New York magazine who got famous by saving some of [Clinton's] body fluids.

Answer: He forgot he is no longer President. And so he forgot that if he goofs there are no aides, supporters and fans to cover it up for him.

This is a very sad thing if you think about it. In the old days, for eight long years, if Bill Clinton entered a dining room everybody scurried around and made a big fuss over him. A band would play Hail to the Chief. Secret Servicemen and syncophants would be everywhere. The owner of the establishment and the maitre d' would come out to fawn on him. And if he stole some of the silver, everybody would think it was just teriffic. He was President of the United States! There is even a woman who next week will grace the cover of New York magazine who got famous by saving some of his body fluids. How about THAT!

Today his aides have other jobs, the senators and congressmen that used to curry his favor now have gone off to curry the favor of George Bush Jr., and if Bill Clinton spills his body fluids, goddamnit he should clean it up.

It's all about power, which he doesn't have anymore. He forgot. But he's a smart guy, and after a short while I think he'll figure it out. After all, he eats three meals a day like the rest of us and unlike not so long ago, he puts on his pants in the morning one leg at a time himself. We should bear with him.

No-brainer #2 is what happened to the XFL? Many of you people reading this won't even know what the XFL is anymore although you probably knew about it back at the beginning of February.

The answer to what happened to the XFL is that they are still playing football games on NBC and will continue to do so until their season ends in April, but nobody will watch any of them.

On opening day, XFL football gathered a respectible 8.5 market share. After that, it just sunk through the floor. Last week, market share was a pathetic 2.3.

Why does nobody watch? Because Vince McMahon of the World Wrestling Foundation promised that the XFL would broadcast games at which the players would rip the heads of the opposing team out of their sockets. Various safety devices would be eliminated. Rules would be changed to facilitate this happening.

But the XFL, before the season began, failed to hire players either capable or desirious of ripping heads out of sockets. The desire wasn't there because the XFL only was willing to pay them $5,000 a game. And the ability wasn't there because the players hired were those too slow or weak to make the NFL, and therefore too slow or weak to rip out heads.

People want heads ripped out of sockets. Give a player a million dollars a game and you'd get a whole slew of them who are both capable and desirous of doing that. But that's not how Vince did it.

And so, the games are a bore. People look in, notice no human appendages lying about, and changed the channel two, to a showing of the movie Terminator 2. In Terminator 2 they rip heads out of sockets.

Bye bye XFL. And see you later Bill Clinton.●

Camp Hero Cleanup

What's In Store For The Toxic Waste And Munitions At Old Army Base?

By Jerry Cimisi

The planned clean-up of Camp Hero in Montauk is moving along, albeit slowly. Last year, a number of the buildings on the base, designed during WWII to appear like a fishing village from the air, were demolished. Then, early in February, a public meeting at Montauk Downs presented by the Army Corps of Engineers and the Parsons Corporation outlined just what needs to be done at Camp Hero and how it will be done.

Considering the concern of local residents over recent talk about toxic debris, unexploded munitions as well as the legend of the Montauk Project that has grown up around Camp Hero, the meeting was not well attended; there were about twenty people present.

The Army Corps of Engineers is handling the cleanup of Camp Hero, while the Parsons Corporation is putting together a study detailing the contamination of the grounds and the situation with any remaining ordnance.

The administrator from the Army Corps of Engineers overseeing the project was present, Luz Spann-LaBato, along with Roland Belew from the Corps who is the engineering and technical supervisor of the clean up. They were joined by two members of the Parsons Corporation, Don Silkebakken and Michael Short.

Camp Hero, which has long been decommissioned, was established in 1942 as a coastal defense installation....

One man who was in attendance told this paper that he had asked the panel about a sign warning of a minefield area at Camp Hero. He had videotaped the sign in 1991; he said the sign is no longer there. The panel expressed no knowledge of this.

Camp Hero, which has long been decommissioned, was established in 1942 as a coastal defense installation for WWII. Located on 469 acres, Camp Hero at one time housed about 600 enlisted men along with 37 officers. There were three gun batteries: Battery 112, Battery 113, Battery 216. The former batteries had two sixteen inch guns; Battery 216 had two six inch shielded guns. During the war the batteries were manned by the 11th Coast Artillery Regiment and the 242nd Connecticut National Guard Coast Artillery Regiment.

Accounts say that the sixteen inch and six inch guns were fired only occasionally and usually for practice. The munitions were stored at a secret location offsite.

It is interesting to note that during the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812, the bluffs of Montauk were used for cannon practice. From World War I to World War II, the area was used as a Navy observation post. For a few years in the early '20s, it was also used as a training ground for the army and the National Guard.

It was not long after the war, 1947, to be exact, that the Camp was declared inactive by the government. In 1949 removal of ordnance began.

However, in 1951, the newly formed U.S. Air Force commenced using Camp Hero for antiaircraft artillery training. They operated 120mm guns, .50 caliber machine guns, and 3.5 inch rockets. This went on until 1957. But, beginning in 1951 and continuing until 1982, the Air Force used Camp Hero for radar surveillance, intended to identify any and all aircraft coming into the area. These were the years of the Cold War. Radar at Camp Hero was considered a bulwark against possible attack.

The former Camp Hero area is currently sectioned under different owners: the State of New York, the Town of East Hampton and the Coast Guard.

In a phone interview this past month, Luz-Spann LaBato of the Army Corps of Engineers explained that the Corps has been assigned by Congress to clean up what are called Formerly Utilized Defense Sites owned by the Department of Defense. Of course, Camp Hero is no longer owned by the DOD, and thus the outcome of the current munitions study will be up to the sites present owners.

Ms. Labato said that it is the experience of the Corps that there could be various outcomes of the study. "Sometimes the current owner or owners just say to leave the property as it is."

At any rate, the first step after a report is put out is to have a public review and meeting on the matter. "The field work is scheduled to be completed by Memorial Day," LaBato said. "Parsons is contracted is have a report out by the end of the year."

In remarking on how much work Parsons has done for the government, Ms. LaBato added, "They have a lot of fomer military people on their staff."

At the beginning of their study of just what is lying around Camp Hero, the Parsons Corporation will conduct what it calls a "geophysical investigation." This includes a Global Positioning System (GPS) with other geophysical instruments, such as metal detectors.

Michael Short of the Parsons Infrastructure and Technology Group, Inc, Ordnance and Explosive Sector in Pasadena, California said that the company had made two site visits to Camp Hero, one in December and the other in early March. "Right in the blizzard, I think it was. The site visits are to determine just what sort of instruments we need to proceed. Weather permitting, we should start at the end of April."

The Parsons Corporation was established in 1944 to provide engineering and construction services for government and the petrochemical industries. Today Parsons is a multinational company that is involved in projects such as oil drilling in Kuwait to biohazard redemption (such as Camp Hero) and the planning of military bases.

"We are currently cleaning up an old bombing range on Kaho'olawe, an island off Maui," said Short. If the possibility of unexploded munitions poses a definite if unlikely danger, Short added that munitions that have lain in the soil for a long time do not pose much of a risk to the environment.

This is an assessment with which many environmentalists might disagree. There is also a disagreement as to just how much information about Camp Hero has been made public. Roland Belew of the Army Corps of Engineers at first said that all material on Camp Hero has been declassified, but later also said that the Corps has not yet been able to get the blueprints of the bunkers and underground structures.

A fair portion of the topography of Camp Hero is swampland. The military obviously recognized a need for good drainage, as there are about 5,500 feet of drain ditches throughout the camp.

The Geophysical Survey will take about three weeks. Three areas will be investigated: Area H, which had been an Ordnance Destruction Range of eight acres.; Area K, Near Shore Ordnance Area, 44.88 acres; Area A, Fire Control/37mm Training. Field work will be ended early in June, with a draft report due in mid August and a final report due in November. ●

elaine k.g. benson, her daughter's column

It's wonderful to come back to Bridgehampton after being away. Every time I've been out of town I have a feeling of joy when I pass the Shinnecock canal. Obviously the canal is not home to me but that crossing always marks the beginning of the East End and the Hamptons. There is an imaginary tollbooth. Once across, I think I'm home.

It's comforting to be back in this little hamlet. The post office, King Kullen, Schmidt's market, the office at Dan's Papers, everything is familiar. Everything is as I left it. Spring is upon us. I've been raking leaves and uncovering bulbs. The hyacinths are up. The snowdrops are blooming. Daffodils are breaking ground. The daylilies and iris are also showing green. It was clear and sunny most of the weekend and I was thrilled to be out in the yard.

Flying cross-country I saw a headline about Santee, Calif. and Santana High School. It is unusual for this little town in East County San Diego to be on the cover of the LA Times. I usually stay in Santee enroute to and from Mexico. My friend Sean is in the graduating class at Santana. I called his parents upon my arrival. Sean was at school the day of the shooting. He was about twenty yards from Charles Andrew Williams when the craziness was going on. We are lucky that he wasn't in the line of fire. It is hard to understand how this act of violence could occur in a suburb like Santee. Santee is an upper middle class neighborhood. There are boats, campers, and off road vehicles in most of the driveways. Many cars have bumper stickers that say, "My son (or daughter) is an honor student at Santana High School." It is hard to fathom. The school was evacuated. Kids were picked up at the parking lot of the local supermarket up the block. Charles Andrew William's father went to pick him up and couldn't understand why he wasn't in the parking lot waiting with the other kids. He never thought of his son as a murderer. The family is in shock. The whole town is in shock. I haven't been able to figure out how to help. I'm grateful that Sean is safe and somehow things will go back to normal eventually.

Our children are our future. Although I have no children of my own, I think all the children are my responsibility. Working with the Bridgehampton Child Care and Rec. Center and trying to help CMEE (The Children's Museum of the East End) become a reality are a small part of trying to help "the Children." I've also been distributing toys in Mexico thanks to The International Toy Bank. Somehow it's not enough.

It is often said, 'if you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem." This is one problem that I can't find a solution for. It's a big one. I think understanding will have to come from the peer group. High School students may have a better idea of how to handle this kind of problem. I feel that I'm out of the loop. I'm open to suggestions. My friends who are parents at Santana say that they are still in shock.

Once again, I am glad to be home. It still feels safe here in the Hamptons. We have our problems, like anywhere. At least, here, I know I can help.

Who's Here:

Jonathan Berent

Psychotherapist

By Janet Berg

As I made my left turn into a hidden, gated driveway leading to a modern home amid thick trees, a mother deer and her two babies crossed in front of my car to stare at me as if I didn't belong there.

Once inside, I must say, I questioned myself, too, as I stood in the office where I was to conduct the interview. Looking out of a large pane of glass towering over a professional-looking indoor basketball court, I quickly reread my instructions. (No, it did not say anywhere that this was the home of Michael Jordan.)

It is the East Hampton residence of Jonathan Berent, one of the leading experts in the field of psychotherapy, author of Beyond Shyness: How to Conquer Social Anxieties, and founding board member of the Friendship Connection, a non-profit organization which provides support and social learning experiences for developmentally delayed adolescents and young adults.

Although you have not seen Jonathan Berent playing professional basketball on television, you may have seen him on The Oprah Winfrey Show, Sally Jessy Raphael, Joan Rivers and many other TV and radio shows.

After working with 15,000 patients, Jonathan pointed out that there is a certain stress factor in the field, along with the many "rewards" of clinical success. "Or else I would burn out," he said. "I have five therapists that work for me," referring to his Great Neck practice, which he started in 1978.

"We see about 120 people a week, so it keeps me busy. I have a problem getting to my creative work which I would like to focus on. It is the first audio-interactive self-help program for individuals with social and performance anxiety, otherwise known as severe shyness."

As he held up the portfolio to show me, I noticed on the cover a replica of Mo, his chubby cat, surfing inside the curl of a wave. "The wave represents stress," he pointed out.

"We have to have a sense of humor, right Mo?" he said to the amiable feline at our feet.

He describes himself as a fairly serious person, full of healthy obsessions that he tries to control. In terms of his social life: "A lot of what I do is work with people on how to develop relationships; and it's funny, all my relationships with guys come out on the basketball court. If I have 50 different guys that are on my roster, I only acquire two or three real friendships, because . . . what is a good friendship? Let's face it, there is a lot of plastic bull—— especially out in the Hamptons, and I like to think of myself as the antithesis of that."

I asked him, "while out socializing do you analyze your friends' body language?" He answered, "It depends on how good the wine is."

Jonathan told me he grew up in Lewiston, Maine, and then he filled me in on some sports trivia: "That's where Cassius Clay had the fight with Sonny Liston for the heavy weight championship — the fight that lasted for 45 seconds."

An average, middle-of-the-road child, neither introverted nor extroverted, he graduated from New York University and Yeshiva University.

He said, "When I was in grad school and doing an internship, for some reason I didn't want to work in a hospital, so, without knowing what I was doing, I asked for a 'correctional placement.' So, there I was, the only white person working in the Bronx in a group home where the clientele was there for homicide. It was wild. The only reason I survived is because I would go across the street and play basketball with these guys. It was proof that anxiety is a 'relative' phenomenon. That experience probably was the most crucial thing in my life that helped me learn how to face anxiety."

> "Social phobia is a problem few have approached because the people who have it do not go for help."

Berent has pioneered psychotherapy for people suffering from social phobia, the third largest mental health problem behind depression and substance abuse. With his methodology, Jonathan promotes a productive, non-traditional therapy without medication, which he claims is his biggest professional accomplishment. "It may be the only program in the country with an actual non-pharmacological methodology in place."

"It is not that I am anti-medicine. About 30% of my patients are on medication, but the majority are not. A lot of people think that a pill is the cure. I am an untraditional therapist. I'm very direct and my philosophy is that your most valuable asset in life is not your bank account, it's your time; so with that I've been able to look for productivity. I say, 'here's the way you get well.' A lot of people that come to me do not want to be in therapy and the only reason they're there is because they are overly dependent on parents, whether they are 10 years-old or 30 years-old. In cases like that I've got to get the parents in first and teach them what to do or else there can be no success.

"My patients range in age; I have seven or eight children under the age of ten, maybe 20 adolescents and a hundred adults, the oldest is 77. The average age of my clients is late 20s. The biggest singular mistake that is made is when you see patterns of social avoidance in children: Parents and professionals say, 'Leave little Johnny alone and he'll outgrow the problem.' It is an attitude disease and most of the time it gets worse. We have many adults in the practice, a moderate amount of teenagers and a few children. It should be the other way around because it's easier to 'treat' if you can get to them during childhood because the anxiety doesn't get to their personalities.

"With children in general, the parent has to learn about 'tough love,' and not to mistake nurturing for rescuing. Too much of it breeds over-dependence, so the thing to do is for parents to learn how to empower children out of the comfort zone, to face fear while providing support, so that they can learn new skills versus enabling the addiction to avoidance.

"Social phobia is a problem few have approached because the people who have it don't go for help. They're so controlled by embarrassment, humiliation and shame that they don't want to be exposed. So, the psychotherapy profession has really not been able to study them enough. I found out early on that with a certain part of this population, you have to get to the parents or you're not going to get to anybody. I am not talking about the executive who comes in with a public speaking problem; these are people who have more pervasive social problems who are pathologically over-dependent.

"Social phobia is anxiety based on performance issues that get out of hand to the point the person has to avoid the situation. Phobia means 'avoidance.' There is a genetic predisposition to anything in life, but the worst mistake that anybody can make is for a person to say, 'I was born this way and it is the way I have to be.' Most is a learned process, which is caused by exaggerated emotions of peer rejection, shame, embarrassment, humiliation and trauma.

"For one person, trauma is to go to war; for another person, trauma is embarrassment. There are different variations of social phobia. Some of my clients can go to a comedy club and do a standup routine, but they will have no relationships because they fear the scrutiny of intimacy versus a structured situation.

"I have a client, who is an ovarian cancer survivor, who says she would rather be back in chemotherapy than speak in public. She remembers back in 10th grade, when her Spanish teacher called on her in front of the class and she was so embarrassed that she blushed and the teacher pointed out, 'Oh my God, look, she's blushing,' and then she freaked out as the focus of attention. That wasn't the cause; her family issues were the cause, but she says that was the trauma that put her over the edge and so she avoided a medical career.

"One of my clients, who is super-obsessive, would not leave the house without her mother at the age of 24 and has never had an intimate relationship. Technology is breeding social avoidance, like the 30-year-old who is very smart, on the computer all day long, lives in total isolation, no peer relationship, makes $30,000 in one day doing a very sophisticated maneuver on the Internet, getting into an initial private offering, but can't function socially. When it came time for the the first therapy session, he locked himself in the bathroom overnight.

"I have a patient with a 4.0 cumulative average at an Ivy League school who has selected mutism. Another typical example: a very bright, 16 year-old kid spends an hour a day studying, and 80-hours a week on the Internet, playing one game. There is a lot of that. That's an addiction within an addiction. Another kid went to private school and then goes away to college and has a breakdown because he was never taught how to think for himself. Again, he is over-dependent. It is a major part of any story about shyness.

"In many situations, the patients do not allow themselves to understand the emotional connection. They may be into the physiological part, such as the biofeedback, but will not allow themselves to get to the emotional part.

"One time a newspaper reporter asked me, what is the difference between people who get out of severe shyness on their own versus those who don't? I answered, when there's a sense of survival, the person gets out of it. I was playing a game with some of my patients a couple of years ago. I would ask them, 'Do you know how to cure social anxiety in one hour? Go to Kosovo. When the tanks are coming at you and you fear for your life, a whole other level of anxiety based on survival will kick in.' So, it's really based on people who feel that they have to survive. And even though most cultures have this, it's an upper-middle class kind of thing. So many of these people are overprotected."

Then therapist flashed back to working at the correctional center and laughed, "Back in the Bronx, when I was working in that correctional setting, none of those kids had social anxiety - they're all street people.

"The saddest thing is the kids who are paralyzed socially, but theoretically can be helped, but their parents (I'll try to be nice) are so confused that they can't do what is appropriate.

"The problem in schools today," he said, "are two basic issues: Number one is a pattern, not across the board, but these kids EX-ploding with their anger have been loners or have been picked on. For example, at Columbine, it was what we have in our society called a pecking order – levels of cliques. These kids at Columbine acted out against the jocks and whoever did not accept them in terms of this social hierarchy. I deal with these issues where people do not know where they fit in or their expectations are out-of-whack. It gets complicated. Most people with social anxiety have anger, but repress it and IM-plode, and it turns into panic obsessive stuff and depression. And some with social anxiety take their anger and explode with violence.

"The real issue, I believe, is that most anger is the result of 'social position.' All the other factors, like learning how to make a bomb on the Internet, do not help.

"The kids who get attention are the hyperactive off-the-wall kids and the kids who suffer in silence and are not a problem to their teachers, so nothing happens."

Almost everyone feels shy or stressed in certain situations, but there is a full spectrum of social problems, from being shy at a cocktail party to crippling phobias that hinder career moves and keep you from personal relationships, to keeping you locked up inside your home.

Jonathan Berent offers support through interactive exercise and helps people overcome low self-esteem and gain a new self-respect. The Sheltered Islander

By Sally Flynn

OBSERVATIONS OF AN ISLANDER # 147
DIM SUM AND THEN SOME

If you read my Danny Boy column last week, I have a correction to make. I found out none of my explanations about the origins of the song Danny Boy were true. Our resident poet laureate, Danny Moran assured me his blessed mother wrote that song about him when he was but a wee lad. Saints be praised!

I hope everyone had a Happy St. Patrick's Day. I know I did. If I can just remember where and when I got this tattoo of a shamrock on my ass I'll be fine...my buddies Liz Toth and Patty McGayhey can't remember where we got them either... it must have been a great party, I can't remember a thing.

But at some point I agreed to attend a Chinese cooking class with Liz. I can cook great Italian food, Jewish cuisine, all the American standards and I'd add Irish cuisine, but that's a contradiction in terms. I love Chinese food the best, but never thought I could cook Chinese, because hey, it's Greek to me.

The Chinese Cooking Class is going on right now, Fridays at the school and it's never to late to join if you have the ignition. It's taught by Daisy Lifton, a common Chinese name. She is assisted by her husband, Floyd der Vonderkind. Call 907-0477 if you are interested.

We learned three dishes the first night, all with ingredients available at George's IGA. The first thing we learned was how many people can fit in a kitchen. The old adage, "Too many cooks in the kitchen spoils the soup," is not true. Too many cooks in the kitchen means a shorter distance to pass the sake.

First up, Daisy got some jasmine rice going in a cooker that looks like a crock pot, but is specific to cooking rice. News to me.

We learned the Chinese method of turning vegetables as you slice them which gave me a whole new way to cut my fingers. But those diagonal cut veggies definitely look like the ones I've seen in white cardboard boxes. It gave me hope that I could possibly succeed in learning to cook Chinese style thereby saving myself thousands of dollars in the future. That pile of diagonal cut carrots was a revelation to me.

Ginger. It doesn't just come in a little tin can or in awful tasting cookies. It's a root. Very knobby and ugly. You scrape the skin off with a spoon. I was having trouble with that until Liz told me to try the edge of the spoon instead of beating it with the bowl of the spoon. Show off... Next you slice the ginger into paper thin slices. Liz, who works at the Country Club, carved the slices into Mah Jong tiles with designs, now that's just going too far!

Next, we learned carmelizing, which I always thought meant becoming a nun. We all watched the sugar water cooking in the pan, like it was a movie... we should've had some Jiffy Pop on the back burner. Suddenly, viola! The sugar began to turn light brown and whoosh, Daisy threw in the chicken, veggies and soy sauce. We were cookin' with gas!

Then we made what I think will become a standard in my house, a delicious vegetarian dish. Daisy brought this great little wok. Not as big as the ones I'm used to seeing. It also had tall square handles, so oven-mitted hands fit easily in the handles. (Boy is she gonna miss that pan at the end of this course...)

The vegetable dish started with an omelet, made with diagonally cut scallions. The scallions were so perfectly cut, they looked like art work in the pan. Let's see if I can remember who cut them... oh... it was me! (Although that's not really important is it Miss Ginger Mah Jong Tiles?) It cooked up fast in the wok and then we put it aside. Next she stir-fried onions, ginger and we gave that a head start and added big tomatoes chunks.

We put all the stir-fried veggies into a bowl and added the omelet, and mixed it all together. It was ambrosia.

The smells from the kitchen brought in handsome men, always a good sign. Garth Griffen and Frank Gambino had to check out what was cookin.' We offered to them to join in the feast to come, but they were on duty monitoring the current adolescent crop at "open gym" in the school. Poor guys.

I didn't think about what we'd do with the food we had cooked for the course, but naturally, we ate it!!! We ate out of deep bowls with chop sticks and sipped green tea. If I had a fortune cookie, the meal would have been complete. You really have to learn to eat with chopsticks to get the full ambiance and flavor of Oriental food. Some people, who shall go unnamed (Miss Mah Jong), ate this delicious meal with a fork. I can't wait for next week, if I learn to make sushi and pot stickers, I'll die a happy woman. ●

The 2nd Annual "Kite Dance"

The Child Development Center of the Hamptons for Special Children honored Nicole Miller at the Second Annual Kite Dance, a black-tie event held at the Pierre Hotel in New York City. More than two hundred people danced the night away to the fabulous music of the Starlight Orchestra and enjoyed a spectacular performance by tenor Michael Amante, which brought the crowd to its feet begging for an encore. Guests also got a chance to bid on some amazing silent auction items that included vacations, jewelry, Versace and Fendi bags, and even a fur wrap by fur king Dennis Basso that fetched more than $3,000. It turned out to be a very successful event for a very important cause.

ROBIN HOOD AND THE BAND OF MERRYMEN

The Robin Hood Foundation is a push the envelope type of charity, with the commitment and vigor to end poverty for children of New York City. They don't have to take from the rich, the rich give willingly as proven by the over $600,000 taken in last week from ticket sales at the Robin Hood party at Irving Plaza in New York. The guest performers of the evening were the Red Hot Chili Peppers. The organization has a board that underwrites the administrative expenses and game plan of hitting the streets in the neighborhoods that need the assistance and creating grass roots support.

Wine Dinner At The Plaza Café

Spirits were high on Friday evening, March 16, at the Plaza Café on Hill Street in Southampton. Hosted by chef/owner Douglas Gulija and his wife Andy, showcasing the North Fork vineyards Bedell Cellars and Corey Creek, a special wine and six-course dinner featuring wine pairings at each course were presented. Esteemed winemaker Kip Bedell ("Mr. Merlot") was on hand to discuss the wines and answered guests' questions. The evening was truly enjoyed by everyone in attendance.

The North Fork: Luxury Redefined

By Susan Simm

It used to be that the South Fork was chic and the North Fork was not. Well, times have changed. A town's "luxury" quotient is often directly related to the number of high-end real estate offices it can support. Just as swallows send "scouts" north in springtime to find prime nesting locations before being joined by the flock, other scouts, in the form of premier Hamptons real estate offices, have arrived on the North Fork and are testing the waters of Long Island Sound.

First Cook Pony Farm Real Estate of East Hampton and now Dunemere Associates, also of East Hampton, have set up shop on this rural landscape.

I opened a press release today and out fell a photo of Enzo Morabito of Dunemere Associates (a prestige South Fork realty) appropriately attired in typical Hamptons gear: quilted khaki jacket with corduroy collar, cashmere turtleneck and requisite Gruen Optika shades. What was unusual about the photo was that Mr. Morabito was standing in front of a vineyard whose landscape was alien to anything Hampton. As it turns out, he was standing in front of a vineyard on the North Fork and he will be heading up the first (important emphasis here) North Fork office of Dunemere Real Estate in Greenport. Greenport? It wasn't that long ago that Hamptonites thought Greenport was somewhere in Brooklyn. Cook Pony Farm Realty had led the way north just months before with its first three offices (already up and running in Southold, Mattituck and Cutchogue) and now Dunemere will "specialize in the sale of luxury real estate." So why is this significant? Well, you can't sell luxury real estate if there is no luxury real estate to sell. Get my point?

Gallery at Castello di Borghese/Hargrave Vineyard

The North Fork has continued to be a peaceful and bucolic place (except for pumpkin season, which is akin to 30 days worth of July 4s on the South Fork) while the "Hamptons" have gotten so pricey and elitist that even the super wealthy are having a hard time affording them. Looked upon as unsophisticated and hayseed, things have changed at a much slower pace 'around the horn.' But that change is speeding up and, while it is creating challenges such as how to keep over-development under control, it is also bringing with it cultural sophistication and opportunities to experience creative and artistic events without ever having to leave North Fork turf.

Ann Marie Borghese of Castello di Borghese/Hargrave Vineyard is committed to creating a cultural center at the vineyard where local residents can come to see exhibits by world class artists, experience the world's greatest operas and, of course, drink some superb wines. Ann Marie left Philadelphia and a life filled with gallery exhibits and a strong connection to the arts to join her husband, Marco, full time at the vineyard. She felt the need to continue pursuing her interests and set out by reaching out to her neighbors to get involved with the arts and the vineyard as a cultural destination. She is succeeding marvelously. Artists are calling and the bastion of Southampton culture, The Parrish Art Museum, is taking notice.

"Windows To The Soul," by New York and East End artist Nina Melendandri, is the third exhibition at Castello di Borgese since Ann Marie and Marco purchased the property from Alex and Louisa Hargrave last summer. The "gallery" at the Borghese vineyard is a converted potato barn with a concrete floor and white walls. Barrels full of aging wine provide a rustic counterpoint to the sophistication of the art on those walls.

Now occupying the space are Melendandri's huge canvasses, three of which were painted, or rather repainted, after the artist surveyed the space where they would hang. Those three canvasses, "Window To The Soul I, II and II" (affectionately referred to by Ann Marie as pinot noir, chardonnay and sauvignon blanc) are so suited to the space that it is almost a shame that they are not a permanent installation. The colors achieved by the artist are remarkable: the effect brings to mind the impossibly rich pigments associated with the walls of chateaux in Provence. They appear to made of plaster rather than canvas and paint.

Melendandri's other canvases are a dramatic departure from these three paintings. They are composed of pastel hues and incorporate organic forms such as pods and fruit. But what at first appears to be delicate and rather simple positively pulls the viewer in the longer you look at them. My brother, Stanton, was particularly facinated with "Onion Shell," a smaller work in a room off of the main hall. He loved the feeling of movement and depth achieved by the artist.

In the main hall Melendandri has hung a series of watercolors, ranging in size from 2 3/4 by 3 inches to 15 by 20 inches. These works are done in deeper, jewel tones in combination with pencil and crayon. A tiny, captivating piece depicts a window through which you can see greenery and an overcast sky. It is untitled by the artist but could be called "Spring Rain": an image simultaneously sad and hopeful.

Some people feel that the Hamptons have a monopoly on sophistication and culture on the East End, but the truth is those days have already gone the way of low waterfront property prices on the North Fork. It is time to embrace our differences and celebrate what we are all lucky enough to share. The finer things in life come in all forms: "luxury" is an oceanfront home but it is also enjoying fine art in a gallery that was once a potato barn while raising a glass of Cutchogue's finest merlot. As Ann Marie Borghese told me recently, "Luxury is not a bad word."

There will be an opening reception for artist Nina Melendandri on Saturday, March 31, from 5-8 p.m. at Castello di Borghese. Her work will appear at the Elaine Benson Gallery in Bridgehampton this spring,

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Several weeks ago The Sunday New York Times had an article about one of its car scribes who drove a Porsche at about 180 mph around a race track. The writer waxed poetic about the experience. I chuckled as I read the article, and thought to myself how truly inexperienced the writer must be in the world of speed. Let me explain.

First of all, 180 miles per hour is really not that fast, especially for a Porsche, especially on a race track with its ultra smooth surface and banked curves. There are perhaps four mass-produced cars that feel absolutely safe at hyper speeds: Porsche, BMW, Ferrari and Mercedes. Of the four, the Mercedes feels the most rock solid on the highway, which I attribute mainly to its uncanny lack of noise and amazingly compliant suspension. The Ferrari would certainly show its four howling exhaust pipes to the other cars on this list, with the Porsche close behind. However, Ferraris and Porsches are hard work to drive fast. They're darty at high speed, and usually make a racket. (I personally like the "racket" of a V-12 or a highly tuned air-cooled six.) Of the lot, the BMW is probably the best all-around Autobahn cruiser. Relatively quiet, sport tuned suspension, and with the "3" series, frugal on fuel.

I concluded that 180 wasn't that fast because all of the above cars will easily exceed 155 mph. And they do it daily on public highways in Europe. Don't get me wrong, these vehicles and their drivers aren't buzzing across Europe constantly at these speeds, but close enough in speed to make use of their cars design potential. It's not the car you're in, but the limitations of the other cars on the highway. Most European cars are modestly powered economy vehicles that usually cruise the highways at 70-80 mph. When you're running at post 100 mph speeds, if one of these slower moving vehicles pulls over in front of you into the left lane just as you are overtaking, it can turn into a memorable moment.

I've driven at over 150 on highways in Europe. It's not that much fun because I always had the feeling that I was beating the hell out of the car, plus it required lots of concentration, mainly for the reason stated above. Other factors that bothered me was gas consumption (at $5.00 per gallon) and there was always the nagging question of what would happen if a tire blew at these speeds.

There's no doubt about it, cars today are very fast, and generally safe at high speed. Not too many years ago, they were terrible. I recently drove a 1957 Chevrolet Convertible and a 1949 MG-K. Both of these models are famous vehicles, best of their breed, highly collectable and valuable. I've always admired their looks, but by today's standards, they are terrible cars to drive. We must have been macho men (boys) to drive these cars in those days and survive. The Chevy wallowed and floated all over the road and virtually felt out of control on fast turns. The MG-TC chassis flexed like rubber, and the cowl shook as though the hood was going to separate from the rest of the car. There was a dead spot at steering center and one could turn the wheel about two inches before there was any response. (This was always a problem with the 'TC since the day it left the factory.) Years ago, I owned a MG-TC and drove my share of '5Os Chevys, and it amazed me that I didn't remember them as being that bad. Then it dawned on me: they were the state of the art at the time, and its only because todays cars are so good that these wonderfull old pieces of iron feel so antique.

What's it going to be like in the near future, say fifty years from now? Will the Porsches and Ferraris of today be considered terrible-handling cars like the MG and Chevy of fifty years ago? Fast cars today are about fifty to sixty miles per hour faster than they were fifty years ago. Will future cars go 230 to 250 mph? What about the future of electric cars? How fast can they go on kilowatts? And if they really go fast won't they run out of juice sooner?

Perhaps we should all stop worrying about car speeds and future speed limits, because there is one future truth. In the year 2050, the speed limit on the Long Island Expressway will still most likely be a ridiculous 55 mph. It will also take you three and a half hours to go from Manhattan to East Hampton in your 900 horsepower Porsche.

Spring Fashion

Ready-(Or Not!)-To-Wear

By Susan Simm

If you haven't spent the winter at the gym, you may regret it this spring more than last. According to every indication, hemlines will be rising everywhere along with the temperature. Not to mention the return of hotpants - this time edged in lace (Chanel) or done in stretchy, clinging (read: revealing) fabrics (Nine West). Here are the trends to look for:

Orient Expression

Along with economic trends, fashion is also taking a more global approach this spring. Turning to Asia for inspiration, designers are embracing Japanese prints and kimono-style tops. Joop! is offering silk short-shorts in a floral print and Christian Dior has a zipper-trimmed clutch bag in an oriental print with tulle edging.

Jewels join the trend with lots of jade, mother-of-pearl and enamel. An emerald, ruby and enamel serpent ring, by Fred Leighton, is a perfect example of this trend. Also look for antique and estate pieces, especially from the Art Deco period.

New Jersey

Clingy and fluid are the buzzwords this season as designer after designer includes yet another drapey number in their collections. Fendi and Cerruti Arte show short hemlines with a degree of cling we haven't seen since the 70s. Versace follows suit with short, streamlined shapes, this time with revealing cuts in some unexpected places. Linda Allard, for Ellen Tracy, adds a draped neckline (similar to a cowl neck) on a sleeveless, short number and Donna Karan, in keeping with her stripy spring casual separates, designs a tie-front jersey dress with asymmetrical hem and even more stripes.

Continuing the retro trend, Versace also offers big, abstract florals mixed with wide stripes while Calvin Klein takes hemlines north with a banded, sleeveless jersey in a more subdued color theme of taupe and pale yellow.

Missoni reminds us of 80s Gucci with black, yellow and white geometric prints while Ralph Lauren takes a more classical approach with a simple white jersey tank dress, then he surprises us with a thigh high slit to there.

Baubles, Bank Accounts and Beads

While you may not notice all the jersey floating around this spring, you will notice the crystals, sequins, beads and rhinestones sewn onto all manner of fabric. Karl Lagerfeld even had his Chanel beauty team stud models' toenails with faux pearls and Swarovski crystals during the showing of his collection.

Halston and Vera Wang are featuring solid sequin-covered short dresses and tank tops. A mesh shawl (a refreshing change from all that pashmina) is covered with beads and sequins from Etro while Hugo Boss covers a long, sleeveless dress with blue-black sequins and adds a black silk skirt underneath, petticoat style. All things crystal continue to rule as Lanvin adds them to a clingy, off the shoulder top and short skirt by Cristina Ortiz.

Armani offers a short shift in black with extensive beading in black and blue. Strongly reminiscent of the 70s is Dolce & Gabbana's leather bell-bottomed hip huggers covered in embroidery and sequins and laced up the front of each leg. Mick Jagger would have been right at home in these during the Stones' 1975 "Tour of the Americas."

For those of you for whom money is no object, Emanuel Ungaro offers an asymmetrical; one shouldered rhinestone studded top for $7,780 and Valentino offers a beaded mini with rhinestone straps for $10,110. Why stop there when you can add a pair of gemstone sandals from Dolce & Gabbana for only $985 additional? And, if you truly have everything (for this season, at least) Dances with Wolves meets Dolly Parton in Dolce & Gabbana's beaded raffia coat (March Elle, p. 408) for the 'chiefly' sum of $34, 406. That's a lot of wampum.

Mad for Plaid

Remember last season's Burberry bikini? The company still proves that dead men are not the only ones to where plaid: witness their new totes, eyewear, underwear and sneakers. Sharing the spotlight is Tommy Hilfiger with lots of gingham checks in his signature red, white and blue color theme. Hilfiger is also launching a line of watches in the same colors many with his TH logo and some that are oversize.

Go Fish

Anna Sui spiced almost every accessory with tiny seashells and Marc Jacobs added rhinestone-studded shells to his belts as fasteners. This theme is echoed in Halston's use of sequins (mentioned above), as the overall effect is similar to that of fish scales.

But perhaps the most whimsical interpretation of this marine theme is a pair of "Gold Fish" sandals of soft leather sitting atop 2" sculpted "fish" heels. A microfiber bag with leather trim is available to match the sandals. Both, at Nordstrom.

Odds and Ends

To top off this season's luxe and whimsy, go for a sun-kissed, rosy-cheeked "girl next door" glow, but get more adventuresome with hair. Less than subtle highlights and white white locks (Gucci) ruled the runways. Also hot are matching lips and nails in dark shades.

Handbags continue to look conservative in that "ladies that lunch" style but belts are hip hugging and bejeweled. Also popping up everywhere are leather low-slung belts to wrap around all that jersey.

This fashion season, hemlines and prices are both headed higher, so whether you're sprawling poolside in your Burberry bikini or benefit-hopping all of those Hamptons soirees in your Valentino mini, remember the one thing that never seems to go out of style: you just can't seem be "too thin or too rich."

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

Spring is in the air today and it makes my job so much more enjoyable. Spring fashions will be popping up like tulips, let's see what going on.

At Mainlines on Park Place in East Hampton you can get ready for spring fun and get everything you need for camp, too. Look for sweat pants and sweat shirts, rain jackets, hats, sandals, dresses, water shoes, tank tops T shirts, shorts sunglasses and even swimsuits.

In Bridgehampton on Main Street at Aimee's Closet there is a great sale going on right now. Look for merchandise that is 25% to 50% off. Aimee has unique clothing, jewelry and accessories. You won't be disappointed.

Also on Main Street at Anne Moore you will find a great selection of spring hats. Now is the time to get your hat collection together for the upcoming spring/summer season.

In the Bridgehampton Commons at Gap Kids, spruce up for spring with adorable spring fashions for the little ones. The colors are pastels, pastels, and pastels. I picked up some cute sweatshirts for my grand nephew Kevin's birthday next week. There are some good markdowns on selected merchandise, as low as $6.99.

At Dapper Dog on Snake Hollow Road at the entrance to the Bridgehampton Commons there is lots going on for spring. Grooming, and some new spring fashions for your favorite pal... It's time for a new spring collar and leash and maybe a new spring jacket. Great stuff for your pet here, stop in and see what I mean.

Christopher Fischer has a new spring cashmere collection with much more to come. Located on Jobs Lane in Southampton and Main Street in East Hampton, look for great cashmere pashminas in wonderful spring colors for any occasion.

Are you looking for some great designer consignment for men and women? At mint on Spring Street in Sag Harbor you can scoop up new and gently worn clothing and accessories, designer clothing at discount prices. Look for Gucci, Pucci, Hermes, Manolo Blahnik, Giorgio Armani, Dolce & Gabbana, Chanel and Prada clothing. You can have fun in this shop.

At D.J. Hart on Main Street you will find fashionable fashions in new spring colors. Look for Pubamayo, April Cornell, Brighton leather, Flax, Crabtree & Evelyn. This shop has great accessories and jewelry.

Have you checked out Sag Harbor based Sophie's Boutique site online yet? I especially love the green adventure bracelet in sterling silver for $78, a great gift for Mother's Day. For eclectic jewelry, accessories and gifts, surf the web at SophiesBoutique.com

At Fandango in Hampton Bays on Montauk Highway you will find unique clothing and accessories for women. This shop has lots to offer and should be on your stop and shop list, for sure!

Time to run home, put my feet up and plan my next shopping trip. And...I want to wish my mom Evelyn, a very happy 80th birthday on Saturday, March 24.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Spring Shopping!

WEB SHOPPING

The weather is changing and so must your wardrobe. But who wants to spend the first days of spring trapped up in a mall? Not me, and hopefully not you. Instead of traipsing to the mall, log onto your favorite store on the Internet or try something new and exotic. State and country borders mean nothing on the Internet.

www.JCrew.com

This site will work for men, women and children alike. Your old favorites are available here with the click of your mouse. Search by keyword or browse the catalogue and clearance section. Yes, clearance online. If you're nervous about sizing, visit the help desk and click on finding the right size under the shopping heading. Size charts for everything are available, but you must know your measurements.

www.anthropologie.com

If you're familiar with this store, you know that they stock the most unusual things to spice up your wardrobe and your home. However, they are not out east – they are located in New York City – so check out their web site. Their site contains everything from crafty switch plates to vintage-like jewelry to the perfect dress for your romantic picnic. Also, if you know anyone who likes the unusual, order a gift for him or her when you place your order.

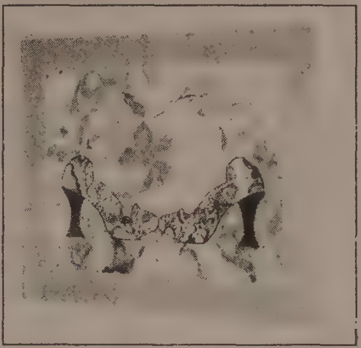
ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

ARTIST MEMBERS EXHIBITION AT GUILD HALL

A breath of fresh air has arrived just in time to chase the winter blues away – the Sixty-third Annual Artist Members Exhibition at Guild Hall. Sounds like a cliche description, but nonetheless a true one considering the show's literally "fresh" demeanor: pots of fresh daffodils scattered around the exhibition space; fresh white paint on the wall; and a fresh, warm welcome as people entered for the show's opening.

The art seems fresh as well, although we can always recognize many artists' recurring aesthetic "signatures." Finding a critical approach for the show wasn't as easy to determine, because it, too, needed to be "fresh."



Miriam Schapiro's "Counterparts"

Integration of another art form (in keeping with 'Art Commentary's' theme these last two weeks) served as this critic's jumping off point, particularly the word "center" to define a dancer's stance. Of course, there are other connotations for the same word that derive from wide ranging disciplines. Center may designate a physical place: a person's skeletal center may be the pelvis; the recent earthquakes certainly had an epicenter. There are also spiritual centers, like the soul's third eye.

The Artist Members Exhibition demonstrates diverse concepts relating to "center" as well. (Most artists, in fact, endeavor to reveal the essence or center of everything they do.) In aesthetic, formal terms, center signifies harmony, balance and symmetry. Consider Paul Brach's two concentric circles, one featuring mountain peaks, the other filled with color. (Does this piece show how opposites bring harmony?) Miriam Schapiro's symmetrical "Counterparts" (two shoes facing each other) conveys this same notion reflecting two sides of the same coin. Images by David Charney ("Moonscape"), Evelene Wechsler ("Cuba") and Nick Tarr (with his optical sculpture)) are also constructed in a symmetrical fashion.

There are less obvious (even chaotic) aesthetic balances achieved by Roberta Quinn ("Joyous Times"), Mark Seidenfeld (photograph of a gesticulating woman), Ruby Jackson ("Belize") and Steve Soreff ("You Live on the Edge of Things").

Some pieces have titles that indicate the idea of "center," including Alex Russo's "Eye of the Storm" and Ruth Nasca's "Heart."

"Center" can signify a concept regardless of formal qualities as well, like Stephanie Brody Lederman's autobiographical piece where chocolate pudding becomes a central childhood memory. Maria Pessino's "The Hummingbird" assumes an equally central influence in the artist's homage to Freida Kohla.

"Center" can also connote life forces as with Celestine Padilla's fruit ("Il Cibi") and Nicky Van Deckter's apples ("Red Farm Delicious") or with Linda Stein's juxtaposition of essential, substantive materials, like stone, wood and metal ("Tableau 353").

Finally, Elizabeth Mann, as the show's talented curator, represents our last connotation of the word, "center."

The "Best of Show Award" went to photographer Walter Schwab for "Golden Boy". The show will be on view at East Hampton's Guild Hall until April 1.

Honoring the Artist: James Guppy

East End artist and Australian transplant, James Guppy, is ready for Spring. And so are his paintings which often feature such luscious items as the season's signifying blossom, the tulip. In fact, tulips have become Mr. Guppy's own personal signifier, connoting not only his homage to Dutch flower painters, but also representing a recurring theme: a flower lost on the high seas.

If we perceive that this latter image seems slightly unusual or even incongruent, we're right on target with what the artist intended. While admitting that his works are often surrealistic, Mr. Guppy doesn't want to be "typecast" as a surrealist. "Art is multidimentional work, covering formal traits, politics, psychology. Good art may exist on many levels," he notes. "The fact that you can write a hundred books about a piece proves that."

Any attempt to apply diverse levels to Mr. Guppy's work is certainly appropriate, but he still resists it. "I allow intuition and the subconscious to influence my work," he says with conviction. "I sometimes don't understand my work until a year or two later. Sometimes other people's comments give me an understanding, too."

Mr Guppy's cover image, "Aquatic Tool," is an example of a curious work that can be interpreted on various levels. Imagine trying to use a fish with a hammerhead. Not very efficient we would say, considering the floppy body. Is this piece a comment on futility, then, given that Mr. Guppy has a penchant for author Samuel Beckett whose characters experience constant frustration?

Or is the image just an exercise in fun and whimsy like Beckett's plays, perhaps? Or is "Aquatic Tool's" sense of absurdity a political statement?

It's hard to say with Mr. Guppy's art, but that's why his work is so provocative. He sheds some light on our vain attempt at interpretation: "Ultimately, we artists are entertainers. Look at Shakespeare. He had to fill a theatre or he'd be out of a job. He learned how to combine content and entertainment. Entertainment is not a dirty word."

Mr. Guppy has paid his dues; he can call "entertainment" anything he wants. Growing up in Great Britain, he first earned an economics degree to please his father, although part of his studies were devoted to art. Then he pursued a research degree in mural painting, equal to a Masters. It was at this point that Mr. Guppy learned to paint, spending the next fifteen years as a muralist and creating works as high as eight stories.

But Mr. Guppy didn't stop there. He and his family moved to Australia and the Pacific Rim, then relocated to the East End where he's lived for two years. While it seems as if there's a big difference between the Pacific Rim and Long Island, Mr. Guppy has maintained a central focus in his work: the use of the sea and the mood-evoking spell that it casts.

Apparently, too, he is still moved by the same kinds artists that have always influenced his work: Monty Python, filmmakers David Lynch and Peter Greenaway and artist Edward Hopper. We can understand the reasons why – the importance of the environment, the distortion of reality, the sense of "otherness," with people existing on society's fringe.

Conversely, Mr. Guppy is nothing like these "fringe" elements. Personally, he seems like just another warm, intelligent, lively artist in our midst.

–MarionWolberg Weiss

Mr. Guppy will be in a group show at East Hampton's Lizan Tops Gallery, "In Bloom," opening Aporil 28. He is also opening at Houston's Mcmurtrey Gallery on March 24- April 21. The gallery's website is: www.mcmurtreygallery.com

15 Minutes

FAME AND FORTUNE

As a born-again skeptic, I question old lines like: A picture is worth a thousand words. It may depend on what picture you're looking at but Andy Warhol may best be remembered for the line attributed to him about... "everyone eventually having 15 minutes of fame." The motion picture, 15 Minutes, which uses that quote as its premise, presents a devastating word picture of the fame-bestowing media and especially television and its exploitiveness in the United States. Because motion pictures and television combine words and pictures, they have great power. Therefore, the audience should be especially wary of their contents. 15 Minutes, and its condemnation of media exploitation, may best be remembered for its spectacular pictures... bull's eye-hit direction by John Herzfeld, rather than his well aimed script since he evinces wonderful acting performances from most of the cast led by Robert De Niro, and super graphic imagery by the great cinematographer, Jean Yves Escoffier. These impressive visual aspects of the film may have you wondering who's calling what pot or kettle black.

PRIME TIME CRIME

Two very chilling performances come from Karel Roden and Oleg Taktarov as a Czech and a Russian emigré, newly arrived on these rough and tumble shores in search of fortune and, subsequently FAME . . . which, they think, will assure them of the big (though blackened) pot of gold. Roden is a razor thin crazy with a temper to match and Taktarov is a chubby, less violent crazy. He's crazy about American movies so immediately steals a video camera. He wants to produce something like Frank Capra's It's A Wonderful Life. What he tapes, however, is a merciless, bloody, crime-besotted extravaganza of murder and arson produced by his maniacal Czech companion. The recording of his horrendous deeds serves his purpose well. He's learned from TV that he can admit his guilt, claim insanity, be repentant, get the right lawyer, become a media personality, go free, get a book deal and (the ultimate) big money movie rights. "I love America," the unremorseful knife slasher/firebug killer exclaims gleefully, "no one is responsible for what they do."

NO SEX. JUST LIVES AND VIDEOTAPE

15 Minutes moves like a wind-swept fire . . .ravaging relentlessly . . . violent and consuming but, almost always under control and oddly... informative. Investigating the crimes is a colorful, headline grabbing but, in a nice way, detective...this is Mr.DeNiro, performing evermore solidly from picture to picture. His tender, tentative moments are as strong as the tough guy with cigar stub persona loved by the newspapers, magazines and television and therefore... the public. It is with De Niro's cop that the killer will choose to make his claim to fame... and as a direct shot into the public eye, with a sleazy, tabloid TV show host, played surprisingly! by, Kelsey Grammer.

NICE GUYS FINISH LAST

The Brothers McMullen writer/director and star, Edward Burns, is a fire marshal along for the ride with police cars, fire engines, emergency vehicles and television news crews and TV "stars" like Roseanne and Gotti Lawyer Bruce Cutler. (I think their "15 minutes" are almost up). Mr. Burns' role, as a tag-along with De Niro's tarnished-badge detective, requires of him not much more than polishing the badge and boots of his mentor... but it works OK. In the movie, full of grand-standing mayhem and foul characters, Eddie Burn's nice guy fire investigator is, not expected the movie succeeds only as crowd pleaser, so does he, too, I imagine.

The gruesome violence that studs 15 Minutes is easier for me to take than the Jerry Springer-like TV episodes within the film of self-confessing "ordinary" people grasping for their "15 minutes."

silvia lehrer's cooking column

The artichoke, which had been introduced to California by the Spaniards when they arrived there, seems to have departed with them only to return in significant quantities about half a century ago. Initially, the plant only grew in Italy then went westward to France, Spain and England.

Artichokes can be braised or fried or stuffed and steamed affording us a medley of delicious culinary compositions. A family member recently reminded me of the braised, sweet and sour artichokes we ate as children. The dish, with roots in Spain, is a humble one. Small pieces of artichoke stewed with onions and tomatoes and sauced with lemon, vinegar and a bit of sugar make the dish sharp and spicy (but not hot) and I loved it. It wasn't until years later, when dining a la Francaise in New York City, that I would be introduced to the vegetable served whole. I nibbled on the leafy bottoms of the leaves after dipping them into a vigorous parsley vinaigrette. The dish became a favorite first course and I served it at every dinner party in my early years of marriage. It was something that could be completely cooked ahead and the flowerlike vegetable looked so pretty as guests arrived at the table.

However you prepare artichokes it is important to carefully trim them. The stems and bottom rows are pared away, snapping off the hard larger leaves until you are left with a central cone of leaves, pale at the base and green only at the tip. About 1 1/2 inches should be cut off at the top. Remove the hairy inner choke being careful not to disturb the meaty flesh beneath, the texture of which maintains the artichoke's personality. The procedure is slightly different when artichokes are cooked whole (see recipe). Once they are cut, artichokes discolor rapidly and should be put immediately into a bowl of acidulated water; that is, water mixed with lemon juice. It is best to cut artichokes with stainless steel knives and cook in stainless steel or enameled cookware.

BRAISED SWEET AND SOUR ARTICHOKES

This intriguing dish has roots in Spain, Italy and the South of France. It is necessary to trim the artichokes carefully as they cook a short time and must be tender enough to eat in entirety. Serve as first course.

Serves 4

1 lemon
4 small or 8 baby artichokes
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 medium onion, thinly sliced
1/3 cup water
2 tomatoes, preferably on-the-vine, peeled, seeded and diced
1 bay leaf
2-3 sprigs fresh thyme
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon white wine vinegar
2 teaspoons sugar
2 tablespoons coarsely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley

1. Fill a bowl with fresh cold water. Cut the lemon in half and squeeze the juice from one half into the water. Put in the squeezed lemon half as well. Cut the stems of the artichokes to about 1 1/2 inches from the base. Break off 2 rows of leaves from the base and discard, then bend back and remove as many rows as necessary to arrive at the tender inner rows. Cut about 1/2 inch of the artichoke tops and discard. Peel the artichoke bottoms and stems, rubbing the cut surfaces with the remaining lemon half as you work. Cut the artichokes in half to expose the choke. With a metal spoon remove the inside hair of the choke and drop into the acidulated water as they are done. Drain and pat dry before cooking.

2. Heat the oil in a heavy saucepan and put in the onion slices. Saute, stirring occasionally for 2-3 minutes, then add the drained artichokes in a single layer and toss to coat in the oil. Add about 1/3 cup water and bring to the edge of a simmer. Add the tomato and bay leaf and season to taste with salt and pepper.

3. Pour over the lemon juice and white wine vinegar and stir in the sugar. Spoon over the onion and tomatoes and cook, covered, over low heat about 15 minutes. Uncover and simmer for 4-5 minutes longer. Check with the tip of a knife to be sure that the artichokes are tender. Remove and discard bay leaf, sprinkle with parsley and serve hot.

SLOW-COOKED ARTICHOKE WEDGES WITH PANCETTA

Marcella Hazan, the high priestess of Italian cooking, suggests this simple way to do artichokes. Artichokes are cut into bite-size wedges then cooked with just a few ingredients.

Serves 4-6

4 large or 6 medium artichokes
Freshly squeezed juice of 1/2 lemon
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1/4 pound pancetta cut into thin strips, about 1 cup
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1/2 cup dry white wine

1. Trim the artichokes as in the preceding recipe. Cut them into wedges about 1 inch broad at their thickest point. Place them in a bowl with cold water and lemon juice.

2. Put the oil and pancetta in a saute pan and turn on the heat to medium.

3. Drain the artichokes and pat them thoroughly dry with a kitchen towel.

4. When the pancetta is well browned - but not crackling crisp - add the artichokes, salt and several grindings of pepper. Stir, turning the artichokes over 2 or 3 times, then add the wine. When the wine has bubbled for about 1 minute, turn down the heat to medium and cover the pan. Cook until the artichokes are tender when pricked with a fork, about 30 minutes, depending on the freshness and youth of the vegetable. When the artichokes are done, if there are watery juices in the pan, uncover, turn up the heat, and evaporate the excess liquid.

ARTICHOKES VINAIGRETTE

Compact, heavy whole artichokes with tight green leaves make an appealing first course when served with a tasty vinaigrette.

Serves 4-6

4 to 6 artichokes
4 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1 tablespoon olive oil

For the vinaigrette
1 large clove garlic or shallot, finely chopped
2-3 teaspoons Dijon mustard
1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
Freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon flat-leaf Italian parsley
1 1/4 tablespoons red wine vinegar
4-5 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

1. Cut the stems of the artichokes evenly so that they can stand, leaving about a 1/2-inch stub. Remove and discard tough outer leaves at the base. With kitchen scissors, cut off the tips of each leaf, spiraling the vegetable. Lay each artichoke on its side, and with a knife, make a sharp clean straight cut about 1 1/2 inches from the top. Put the artichokes into a bowl of water with 2 tablespoons lemon juice to prevent discoloration.

2. Place artichokes in a deep stainless or enamel saucepan just large enough to hold them in one layer. Pour in enough water to come about 2/3 of the way up the sides of the pot. Add oil and remaining lemon juice. Bring to a boil over high heat, uncovered, adjust heat, then cook at a brisk simmer 25-40 minutes (according to size). When you are able to pull off a leaf easily the artichokes are done, be careful not to overcook or they will be mushy. Remove with a slotted spoon and turn upside down to drain on paper towel. Set aside. Can be prepared up to one day before. Refrigerate in a suitable container.

3. Prepare vinaigrette: In a mixing bowl combine garlic or shallots with mustard, salt, pepper and vinegar. With a fork or wire whisk stir to mix. Gradually beat in oil in a slow steady stream until mixture is thoroughly blended. Taste to adjust seasoning as necessary. Can be prepared up to several hours ahead.

To serve: Divide the vinaigrette evenly into custard cups and place on individual salad-size plates alongside the flowerlike artichokes. To eat them, tear off leaf after leaf, dipping them into the sauce, then scraping off the bottom of each leaf with the teeth until the choke is reached. Scrape off the fuzz revealing the heart, the most delectable part of the artichoke. Be sure to provide bowls for the nibbled leaves and castoff fuzz. Serve at room temperature.

Paws For Independence

A friend of mine was hurt in a car accident a couple of years ago and, while the injuries Nancy suffered were not life threatening, she ended up in a wheelchair and could no longer do certain things for herself. An act as simple as picking up dropped keys became impossible. She explored many options to solve this problem but, for a variety of reasons (one of them being that she didn't want to live with an assistant) she couldn't find a good fit.

Then one day she called me and said, "Susan, I'd like you to come for a visit next Wednesday. I have something I would like to show you." She didn't go into any detail about what she wanted to show me and so, on Wednesday, I arrived at her house, knocked on the door and was greeted by a large yellow Lab.

"Nancy?" I called into the house. "In the kitchen," she responded. I walked in looking behind the door to see if someone else was in the entryway. The only one there was the happy Lab who was gently wagging its tail.

"When did you get a pet?" I asked after I made my way to the kitchen. Nancy replied, "This is what I wanted to show you. Watch this. Pilot, go get my keys!" Nancy said to the Lab. The dog jumped to attention and walked briskly to the low table in the living room, picked up Nancy's keys in his mouth and carried them to her waiting hand. "Wow," I said, "That's a pretty good trick." "It's no trick, Pilot can retrieve keys for me and lots of other things, too. This is the answer I found to having somebody around to help me." I said, "C'mon Nancy, that dog can't do all the things you need help with." "Oh yeah?" She responded, "Who do think opened the door for you?"

Finally, Nancy told me the story about Canine Companions for Independence (CCI). This non-profit organization trains dogs to help care for people with disabilities. The dogs are truly amazing once they are completely trained. They really can retrieve keys, pick small items up off the floor such as pens and papers and can even carry groceries. Additionally, the dogs are trained to open doors and turn light switches on and off.

You may have noticed them around town, standing patiently next to a person in a wheelchair or lying quietly under the table of a restaurant. Unlike seeing-eye dogs, who generally wear harnesses, these dogs have their own official outfit: a blue and yellow cape.

One of the advantages the dogs provide those with handicaps is not immediately obvious: people report that strangers are much less intimidated about approaching someone in a wheelchair when they are accompanied by a friendly and affectionate animal.

CCI has a local office on the campus of SUNY Farmingdale. They have 151 active dog-person teams currently and have a waiting list of 42 candidates for dogs of various skill levels. CCI graduated 29 dogs in 2000 and have 82 people raising puppies and teaching the young dogs the basic skills.

If you are interested in raising these dogs or would like to find out more general information about Canine Companions for Independence, you can contact them at SUNY Farmingdale, Farm Complex, Melville Road, Farmingdale, NY 11735-0205. Their number is (631) 694-6938 or find them on the web at www.caninecompanions.org.

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

After settling in Primoyrsk and getting familiar with my hosts, the first order of business was to meet the local government officials. The first order of business was for me to make a presentation to the Mayor and Legislators as to why I was there and what I intended to accomplish. They were very curious and also very cautious in what they said as there was a former communist journalist covering my interview with them. Vlodomir, my Farm Bureau, host said they were afraid of me and didn't want to be perceived to be ignorant of the issues. I spent three hours talking about agriculture in New York and Long Island and how we interact and participate in the public policy process. In the Ukraine, government is only top down. The federal government is in control of the state government (Oblast level) and then down to the local (Rayon level) government. The only things the lower government officials have say over is what the federal government allows. I explained how our government is from top down and bottom up. Our government works both ways as the US Constitution framers anticipated. They wanted to know how much it costs to farm: fuel prices, labor, fertilizer, crop protectants and how much profit our farmers could make in a year (all things considered). The Ukrainians were surprised to learn that fuel is cheaper there than in the US. The biggest issue for the Ukrainian farmers is the privatization process of the farmland and the breakup of the collective farm system. In 1992 the Ukrainian government gave a decree for all farmers to be eligible to receive 50 hectacres (100 acres) of farmland. The problem is there is no formal, legal process for "codexing" (surveying) the farmland, determining boundaries and ownership and the formation of legal deeds to prove ownership of land. Here it is, almost 10 years later, and the farmers are still waiting for that process to be implemented. Without ownership of land they have no property rights and no collateral for loans. Without collateral, credit is the other significant issue as private farmers need loans for seed, fertilizers, equipment and other input costs.

So, I spent my first several days learning about their system or lack thereof, and the most significant issues the private farmers association was dealing with. It was on the job training for me to learn about their culture and why things were so different. The Ukrainian farmers are very strong willed and cautiously optimistic about their future. They have a saying that a pessimist is an informed optimist. They laugh about the slow progress of becoming a democratic state. The fact is that the government is still controlled in Parliament by the communists, many of whom are waiting for democracy to fail so they can say I told you so. Many of the old timers believe the old system is better. Capitalism is slow in coming for agriculture because it is not the priority of the federal government. Transition of defense industries to manufacturing of missals, rockets, planes and steel are the priority to give Ukraine cash flow from an export market. Until that sector stabilizes, farm issues are secondary.

After a couple of days in Primoyrsk, I was back on the train from Zaporizha to Kiev to attend the National Convention of the Private Farmers Association of Ukraine. It was similar to our American Farm Bureau Convention but far less democratic in process. I saw the Ukrainian Prime Minister give a historic speech on the Privatization Movement. He assured the farmers the federal government was prepared to finance the "codexing" surveying of the land so farmers could get their land and have farmland as a commodity for farmers to buy and sell. I was there while Ukrainian history was being made. After the convention, the farmers and I took the overnight train back to Zaporizha where I was to spend the next week learning more about their issues and history. Next week I'll continue on with the history of the Kossaks.

POLICE BLOTTER

(Alleged) Crime of the Week has to go to a twenty-five year-old man, Charles S. Crump, who was arrested on five charges stemming from alleged Internet credit card applications. Southampton Town Police said that Mr. Crump, who is described as an "unemployed college student," obtained the names and social security numbers of the Monday Night Ladies Bowling League at the Westhampton Bowling Alley, 111 members in all. Crump then allegedly used fifteen names to file for credit accounts at online with J.C. Penny, Spiegel and other businesses. He also opened accounts with credit companies, such as VISA. With the aid of the fraud departments of various companies this "clever" activity was traced back to Crump and when police searched his apartment they found records and computer files of twelve victims. In addition to these charges, Crump is currently on parole from a 1999 drug conviction in New York City.

A Goldilocks crime: a resident of Fireplace Road in Springs reported that someone had entered her premises, made use of the contents of the refrigerator, slept in her bed and, in departing, left a half finished Budweiser behind. East Hampton Town Police took the half finished Bud with them – as evidence, of course.

That's one way to melt the snow. A snowplow clearing the East Hampton Airport runway caught fire. The fire was put out in short order with the driver injuring his knee when exiting the burning truck.

More credit card crime. Two Ukranian men in Flanders used stolen credit card numbers to buy computer equipment that police say the pair intended to ship to Ukraine. An online distributor tipped off police, who arrested the men in an undercover operation. Posing as delivery men, police delivered items the men had ordered to the Flanders address and then arrested Andily T. Tsikh and Yaroslav I. Romanyuk when they accepted the merchandise.

Once more, in similar vein: a Water Mill resident reported to Southampton Town Police that someone unknown to him had set up a cell phone account in his name and, between September of last year and the first of this year, ran up $3,000 in charges. —Jerry Cimisi

COVER STORY

Dear Dan,

As one of your readers, I would like to tell you how very much I enjoy seeing those beautiful magazine covers as I finish my shopping at King Kullen on Montauk Highway, Center Moriches.

The covers are such an attraction to me that I collect them as I would pieces of art, even framing some because of their beautiful designs and use of colors.

Just a note to say "keep them coming."

The Ultimate "Turn On"

Most property owners don't realize the importance of preventive maintenance for the irrigation system. They only react when a dry spot appears in the landscape or a leak causes damage. The irrigation system is like any other mechanical device. It requires periodic maintenance to ensure proper performance and longevity.

Irrigation systems have been sitting idle all winter and now is the time to charge your system. Turning the water on and plugging in the timer is not all that is needed to have your sprinkler system working at optimum performance.

When turning the shutoff valve on, located at the water source, it is very important to charge the system by turning the valve very slowly, letting the system fill with water slowly, preventing water hammer, which is a big culprit of broken mainfolds and main lines as are poorly winterized sprinkler systems. Once the system is charged it is important to check for leaks before activating any zones, and then each zone individually. In addition to checking for leaks, sprinkler heads should be checked for proper spray patterns, leaking, rotating, adjustments and proper height in the ground.

Irrigation systems should also be checked periodically for various adjustments, cleaning and functioning. The frequency is determined by the quality of the equipment and the installation. Older systems and poorly installed systems may require weekly maintenance, newer systems can be inspected biweekly, and quality systems can be checked monthly. Irrigation systems with good preventive maintenance programs last longer, perform better, and provide for a healthier landscape. Irrigation systems are similar to automobiles or heating/cooling systems requiring regular maintenance by competent, knowledgeable, and well-trained individuals. Questions: call Robert Boyle of Orchard Irrigation, Inc. at 631-246-6020.

"Best of the Best Attorney"

I am writing this for all of us who have someone in our lives whom we love and would never want to see any harm come to. Love is a wonderful feeling, one of its benefits is it takes us away from otherwise insurmountable situations to plateaus of, "we can overcome this together".

Then there comes that dark cursed time we all dread, illness, which, with all the love in the world, is the most difficult test of that love. Do we lose faith, or do we draw from that love the strength we need to overcome even the worst situations? Our family has come to that point where we need to concentrate all our love and help one of our family members get through a dark time. Michael is my son-in-law and has been living with HVC for about ten years, that we know of. His condition was always taken very lightly because he always looked so good and was in otherwise top notch health. We all felt that with his monitoring of his diet he would live to be a hundred. Michael is the kind of guy everyone loves. He is never too busy to help anyone and always has a smile on his face. Such expressions as "mench", "he hasn't got a bad bone in his body" and many other similar phrases have been used to describe Michael. I am sure some of you had the pleasure of having Michael do a drapery or shade installation in your homes, in which case you know exactly what I mean. This past winter reality set in big time. One morning Michael went to work to do his drapery installations out in the Hamptons and on the way out he started coughing up blood. He returned home where the situation worsened, he was bleeding profusely. Michael was rushed to Stony Brook hospital where the doctors were at a loss. It was a nightmare, the weekend, with no specialists on staff and a relatively new disease which few specialists can even understand fully. It was determined that Michael's portal vein had burst due to the fact that the liver could no longer handle the amount of blood that it had to process. Michael's liver was obviously a lot more damaged than had been suspected. A new procedure for the liver, called a stint, seemed the only way to neutralize this situation. The problem now was that none of the staff at Stony brook had ever done this procedure and it is quite complicated. A stint, in as simple terms as I understand it, is a metal tube attached to the vein and inserted through the liver to relieve the pressure, hopefully stopping the portal vein from bleeding. Fortunately Michael's wife knew of such a surgeon and she called him, thank God he was home, and he rushed to the hospital to set up the procedure. Michael was saved and has been put on a liver transplant list. Anyone familiar with transplant lists must know that it is extremely difficult. There is an excellent chance that a partial liver transplant will increase Michael's chances. The liver is an organ that can regenerate itself. A doner can regenerate the piece that is donated and the recipient can grow more healthy liver tissue from the piece donated. The match is the key. Body weight has to be similar, blood type, and general health. I implore anyone who would be willing to share his or her love for life for Michael to please call Nora at 631-286-4690.
